

Consumers should be able to keep their cellular phone number if they choose to switch service carriers. It's bad enough that one has to buy a new phone every time a need to change wireless carrier arises. The least FCC could do is help consumers keep their current number no matter who the carrier is.